CUTWORMS IN GARDENS

The poison bait made with bran and Paris green and sweetened with molasses or sugar seems to be a most effective remedy for cutworms in gardens. Mix Paris green and bran together until the bran is quite green. Cornmeal can be used instead, and is quite as good, or better, than the bran, or shorts can be mixed with the bran (the writer used some self rising pancake flour with good effect). Mix this with water to the consistency of chicken dough as above stated, and place spoonfuls at intervals through the garden where cutworms are bad, not closer than three, four or five inches to a plant. This is best done at sundown, or in the early

The old time remedy of tin capsules or paper collars around tomatoes and other plants, when not too numerous, is excellent. Care must be taken, however, not to inclose the cut worm in the soil inside the collar.

Where a plot or a flower bed or a limited planted area is to be protected, supposing, of course, that no cutworms exist in the space, one can afford to place boards temporarily around the area, putting the edge of the boards about two and one-half to three inches below the surface of this enclosure close to the boards or, better, smear the boards with a narrow band of sticky substance such as tanglefoot. We used this successfully to form a barrier stalk borders in gardens by putting it on the outside of boards as indicated above.

One might go to the trouble of sharpening a broomstick or a hoe handle and making numerous deep holes on the outside of this barrier into which the worms might fall, where they are easily killed, or, for that matter, the holes might be made around unprotected plants. This board plan might also be used where plants are grown in rows, running a board on each side of the row, care, of course, being taken, as above, that no cutworms are enclosed inside.

An Appeal

You home-seekers do not know what you are missing by not wanting to become citizens of this grand country of ours. There isn't anything like it under the sun. You ought to send a delegation over to see us—the land of the free—land of fine churches and licensed saloons, bibles, forts and guns, houses of prostitution, millionaires and paupers, theologians and thieves, liberals and liars, politicians and poverty, christians and chain gangs, schools and scalawags, trusts and tramps, money and misery, homes and hunger, virtue and vice; a land where we can get a good bible for fifteen cents or a bad drink of whiskey for the same price; where we have men in parliament with no wife and men in penitentiary for having two wives; where some men make sausage out of their wives and some want to eat them alive; where we make bologna out of gophers, canned beef out of horses and sick cows, and corpse out of the people who eat it; where we put a man in jail for not having the means to support and on the rock-pile for asking for a job of work; where we allow Sabbath-breaking and fine men for preaching Christ on the street corner; where we have a parliament of fifty-six members to make laws and a supreme court of five men to set them aside; where good whiskey makes bad men and bad men make good whiskey; where the newspapers are paid for suppressing the truth and made rich for teaching a lie; where professors draw their convictions from the same place they do their salaries; where preachers are paid $1200 a year to dodge the devil and tickle the ears of the wealthy; where business consists of getting hold of property in any way that won't land you in penitentiary; where trust "hold up" and poverty "holds down"; where men vote for what they do not want for fear they won't get what they do want by voting for it; where Galetians can vote and women can not; where a woman who goes wrong is made an outcast and her male friends flourish as gentlemen; where the political wirepuller has displaced the patriotic statesman; where men vote for one thing one day and abuse it 364 days; where we have prayer on the floor of our national capital and whiskey in the cellar; where we spend $500 to buy a statesman who is rich and $10 to put away a working man who is poor; where to be virtuous is to be lonesome and to be honest is to be a crank; where to sit on the safety valve of energy and pull wide open the throttle of conscience; where gold is substance, the one thing sought for; where we teach the untutored Indian eternal life from the bible and kill him off with bad whiskey; where we put a man in jail for stealing a loaf of bread and in parliament for stealing a railroad; where a cheapskate book talker, who walks in broad daylight, justice is asleep, crime runs amuck, corruption permeates our whole social and political fabric, and the devil laughs from every street corner. Come to us. We've got the greatest aggregation for good things and bad things, hot things and cold things, all sizes, varieties and colors ever exhibited in one town.

"OBSERVER."

No Changes in Homestead Law

In answer to a series of questions by Mr. Buchanan in the House of Commons, the government through Mr. Crothers announced that practically no changes had been made in the regulations regarding pre-emptions. A settler is not now required to continue to own his patented free homestead until he has completed the duties for his pre-emption. A homesteader cannot secure a patent upon his homestead by keeping upon his land a certain amount of cattle and other live stock. The government has no intention of making any changes at the present time.

The Charge of the Suffragettes

Led by Christabel Pankhurst (First prize poem, by Kenneth Martin of the Edmonton High School.) Half a brick, half a brick, Half a brick, onward, Right through a pane of glass Shattered and thundered. "Forward, ye Suffragettes!" All the world wondered;

late the thoroughfare

Christabel, the one vagabond,

"Forward, ye Suffragettes!"

Was there a maid afraid?

Not though their leader knew

There'll be an awful strew,

Theirs but to do and die;

Themselves to smash and cry;

Others not to reason why;

They're but to smash and cry;

Into the thoroughfare

Charged that one hundred,

Windows to right of them;

Windows to front of them,

Crashed and shattered,

Thrown at mud and stones,

The cops with broken bones,

In uncertain tones,

Charged that one hundred,

Flashed all their hatchets bare;

Flashed as they whirled in air;

Shattered the windows there,

Smash the coppers' hats;

Looked the men in awe,

Plunged in the thickest fight,

All for their fancied right,

Cop and civilian

Reeled to their deadly stroke,

Shattered and sundered;

Changed that one hundred,

Cops to the right of them;

Cops to the left of them;

Cops behind them;

Cops before them;

Soon all the tables turned;

The cops, the maids they spurned,

While fire within them burned

Against that one hundred.

Then one little Jane,

Who smashed a window-pane,

Back ran into the lane,

Without the one hundred,

Just before the bend,

That's where she was pented,

Without, without the one hundred.

Up in Bow Street Court,

They're still being tried,

One now knew she cried.

Suddenly her dainty shoe,

Right at the judge it flew :

And without more ado

She gave her a fortnight.

If she indulged in fight,

It would serve her right ;

If she'd get half a year,

She said, "Never fear,

For then I won't be here,

But they go on hunger strike."

But they had no affright,

They were not satisfied.

Oh ! the wild charges they made !

When shall their glory fade ?

When they shall die unfed,

Not upon their beds,

While still let this your heads,

Now, all my readers dear,

I want you all to hear,

Those who would windows smash,

Must go, all in the crash ;

Those who are caught will stay,

And not go another day.

With that noisy one hundred,

CONFIDENTIAL

My Lecture on India

It Achieved a Result Beyond What Was Intended

By DONALD CHAMBERLIN

When we of the wild west were beginning to put on a semicivilized garb and to change our ways, the same came over the outlaws who had to do it. The horse stealing industry was not as profitable as it had been and was better taken care of by those who had never been lost.

The Indian horse thief had been more fortunate, since more of his business was done by means of checks on banks and less with gold dust.

The Indian horse thief had been forced into the butterfly confidence man.

But before he ceased to be a desperado he began to be a desperado in other ways, too. Both he and I had our region.

He was the most drested of the many desperados in the country at the same time the most artful swindler.

His real name was not known, though many of the names he used were well known.

Before he became to be a desperado he required the signature of the El.

He had an especial fancy for assuming various characters. He once made a fine hand personage a captain on from the east looking over the mountains with a view to setting up a bank.

He represented himself as an agent of the post office department. In that he was not so successful, or he was not successful enough, since he was not able to get a job.

But he did not hesitate to kill the man who hired him, and nothing was given him to eat.

One day a man rode into town who said that the El was masquerading in the region through which he had passed. The man asked me if I knew how he knew the fellow was the El, and I said I knew him for the El, whom he had seen.

I had done some work as deputy sheriff for him, I had been engaged at one time to help him to take the job of going out to try and bring in the El, dead or alive.

I think the preference for dead was due to the fact that there was a possibility of the prisoner's escape either by drowning or by being cut down.

That night my master sent word that I would fight fire with fire. In other words, I would play a part.

The El was playing a part, I know.

I was a strong, healthy boy with white cravat, intending to pass myself off as a military collector fund for the relief of foreign countries. We had had such a man among us recently, and I succeeded in getting a printed document to show that he had been killed.

I had been careful in order to be safe to talk intelligently on the subject of foreign countries.

Now I was the newest hooker boy, and my saddlebags filled with the printed matter, a Derringer pistol stowed in each coat sleeve as an astute card, I started out.

I was obliged to travel fifty miles before I found a house, but was not disappointed to get out from house to house to talk to every respectable citizen and was evidently on the way to make an excellent scoop.

I continued as those citizens who were most interested in the El's church building scheme, and, selecting one, Abner Smith, I told him, in true missionary style, as James Azurin, missionary in India, and, telling him that I had come among the people of the town to collect funds, I proceeded about my business as best I could.

He replied that I had arrived at an inopportune time, and my efforts were rebuffed.

He said he was a member of the First Methodist Church, but was not present, though not noticed by others present, was not lost on me. But I at once set about convincing the reverend gentleman that he had a great need for me, especially in his church building enterprise, by offering to work with him in his own school.

"I am the foundation," I said earnestly, "by building a church for these good people. After the church is finished they will be more than glad to do me a favor."

For my part, I shall not attempt to raise any funds here, but will gladly remain in the town until you give me the chance in my power."

I could see his thought in his eye. At first he was disposed to get rid of me, fearing he might not be able to make a drape of me. Then it occurred to him that I had come to him with my certain work for which he had not been educated. On the whole, was it not better for him to risk giving himself away to me and secure my help than to keep himself away to a number of persons?

"I shall be happy for your assistance, but I am not here to help you. I have lived in India, and I am able to interest these people in a way that would be impossible for me to interest them in Canada. I am the minister of a church, which, as you say, is the first step for them to take. A meeting has been called for this purpose, and the town fathers are favorable disposed to the work. I had intended to address them at length, but after a few preliminary remarks I will speak to you again."

"It will give me great pleasure to do what I can," I replied. "Mean while, I will go to your some-places showing what we have done in India and what we hope to do hereafter. You may be able to scatter them so that they will be scattered all over the world."

Grasping his hand cordially—it was cold as stone—I departed, breathing heavily, but with a smile on my face, for I knew that short of a knowledge of my game came to him who would send a bullet crashing into my head. I was, if anything, more nervous in my mind, could not be drawn quicker than the weapons he doubles carried under his coat.

He combed composed of soft tones are gentle, the words are smooth, and when decorated with faint paper frills and parsley look quite the real thing.

He did not let your mouth water at the sight of those dainty slices of ham resting on lemon leaves on the bun's festive board. His fingers are short and nimble, the stage by strips of lemon, the reddish under side of which makes a convincing substitute for the tongue, that is generally represented by white leaves from the humble cabbage.

The larger and more impressive the stage article, the greater the flavor. Huge pieces which will produce a clear, ringing sound when struck by a sharp wooden mallet.

The crust is in colorful powdered pâche, which includes a dash of hot water and sometimes a few boiled eggs.

When you obtain a peep behind the scenes just before a hundred scenes to be staged you will be surprised to find the kitchen busy, slicing up tomatoes and bananas. You would see those slices being laid out in plates square, round, or whatever shape you like.

The joint is a wooden affair, often a few which a slice of genuine beef is placed, giving the impression of a large piece of meat.

Were you to obtain a peep behind the scenes just before a hundred scenes to be staged you will be surprised to find the kitchen busy, slicing up tomatoes and bananas. You would see those slices being laid out in plates square, round, or whatever shape you like.

Under the glare of the lime-light this dish assumes an astonishing resemblance to lobster salad, and in color, taste, and texture is a general substitute for fish, entries and hens' e'evre.

One of the most tantalizing illusions I have ever seen is the stage cook who turns out to stage food, however, is where soup is concerned. This is an interesting contrast, which when faded out of view still appears the appearance of a thick liquid.

No banquet would be complete without a turkey. A lot of meat decorated with beans and peas covered with browned gravy, saves the management the expense of running up poultry, but adds to the entertainment with comparative safety using this asset to the feast about the stage without damage to life or property—Blackwell's Lodge.

The Government Printer.

When I comes to you for your Uncle Sam takes a rank among the nations. He has a $15,000,000 printing office that is the best equipped in the world. Although the cost of printing in this country exceed the 1,000,000 copies of printed matter sent out weekly from the United States, the cost of printing in India does not approach the multitude of different publications that prints and males.

Over a thousand publications are issued weekly from the press during the course of a year, appearing daily, weekly, monthly, annually or at frequent intervals. There are more than a thousand different mailing lists must be kept in the city room.—New York Sun.

Who's he? 'Benn' 'El'

Some hundred years ago a small boy, son of four brothers, heard a violin player in the street. He was so fond of the boy's music that he had not been born a girl.

Dropping his game, so the story runs in Woman's Work in America, he came to the door of the violinist's home and asked him to teach him to play. When he was ten he had learned to play so well that he was invited to a concert.

He was a boy of nine when he gave a quick sharp command.

His mother died when he was ten.

I saw him start. He does not disobey. He puts his hands above his head and then grasped his coat collar with one hand, and then with his neck, and with the other held the muzzle of my pistol against the back of his head.

He was completely in my power. I called out to his host, who raised a window, and I asked him to come down. When he did so I told him what I had done.

He was a rather tall, sharp faced young fellow, with hair quite long. His eye was a steel gray, and on meeting one of his own personal calling he looked through me with a steady gaze, though not noticed by others present, was not lost on me. But I at once set about convincing the reverend gentleman that he had a great need for me, especially in his church building enterprise, by offering to work with him in his own school.

"I am the foundation," I said earnestly, "by building a church for these good people. After the church is finished they will be more than glad to do me a favor."

STAGE ILLUSIONS.

The Dead of These Are the Banquet.

Nothing is so deceptively as the stage meal, although the art of the property man makes such repeats appear deceptively as the art of the cook.

A favorite stage substitute for meat is sponge cake, which can be into the shape of cutlets or steaks and presented in a most genuine appearance.

The advantage of such material is that it is easy for the actors to consume and cut out any pieces they may desire.

Cutlets composed of soft tones are cutlets composed of soft tones, and when decorated with faint paper frills and parsley look quite the real thing.
